The problem is not in extracting from the vacuum. The problem is in the power loads, without destroying

The diagram shows a cross-section of a vacuum tube. On the left is a yellow vertical rod labeled 'cathode' with a red arrow pointing to it. To its right is a blue horizontal rod labeled 'anode' with a blue arrow pointing to it. Below the anode is a grey rectangular block labeled 'Magnet' with a green arrow pointing to it. A blue arrow labeled 'E' points from the cathode towards the anode. A green arrow labeled 'S' points from the magnet towards the anode. A red arrow labeled 'S' points from the magnet towards the cathode.
